Wolfpacks Colliding -- Venezuela, Panama, Cuba - World

The Global Context of the Venezuelan Conflict

The current situation in Venezuela must be understood as part of a broader historical and global landscape rather than an isolated incident. As of January 4, 2026, the geopolitical instability in the region is deeply interconnected with tensions in Taiwan, Okinawa, Ukraine, and the Middle East, specifically regarding Israel, Gaza, and the strategic maritime routes of the Suez Canal and the Straits of Malacca and Hormuz.

A central driver of this global friction is the control and status of the U.S. dollar. Various international actors are actively working to displace the dollar from its global dominance, largely because the United States has weaponized its currency and established conditions that have ultimately weakened its own economy and national standing. This perceived weakness has created opportunities for various global powers, including the Chinese Communist Party, Russia, and Zionist interests within the government, to exert influence.

Routes, Resources, and the Death of the Monroe Doctrine

The conflict in Venezuela is not driven by the Monroe Doctrine or efforts to combat drug trafficking, despite official narratives. Instead, it is a struggle over strategic routes, natural resources—specifically oil and gold—and global ideological control. This region has been a focal point of globalist conflict for over 500 years, beginning with the arrival of Spanish explorers like Columbus and Balboa, and continuing through centuries of competition between the Spanish, English, Dutch, French, and Portuguese.

The modern "battleground" is no longer confined to borders; it is unrestricted and global. There is a high probability that the conflict will spread to other nations such as Cuba and Nicaragua. Furthermore, strategic ports in the Bahamas and China's growing presence within the United States—including the operation of illicit farms—illustrate that the threat is internal as well as external.

Target Matrices and Engineered Migration

The destabilization of various countries is facilitated by a "target matrix" involving non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Specifically, the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society (HIAS) is identified as having active offices in Venezuela, Colombia, Panama, and the United States. These organizations facilitate the movement of people from targeted countries into other targeted countries, such as the United States, which serves to destabilize these nations while resources are extracted from the points of origin.

While some reports suggest Venezuelans are returning home, the long-term outlook remains volatile. Neighboring countries like Panama and Argentina have expressed intentions to restrict the entry of Venezuelans, though the reality on the ground, such as the current low flow through the Darien Gap, remains in flux.

Strategic Infrastructure and the Information War

Significant geopolitical moves are visible through infrastructure and organizational placement:

- Panama: The United Nations and various NGOs remain entrenched in the "City of Knowledge" (Ciudad del Saber) near the Miraflores Locks, a vital point overlooking the Panama Canal. China is also expanding its footprint in Panama through bridge construction and the control of ports on both the Atlantic and Pacific sides.

- Guatemala and Belize: The United States is constructing a massive embassy in Guatemala and expanding road networks in Belize. These developments suggest the establishment of a "government in a box" to maintain regional control, heavily influenced by Zionist interests.
- Africa: The conflict in Somaliland and the presence of U.S., Chinese, and Japanese interests in Djibouti are purely about controlling access to the Red Sea.

Currently, a sophisticated information war is being funded to "sell" the necessity of a war in Venezuela to the public. This campaign masks the primary objective: ensuring that global powers, including China, maintain access to Venezuelan oil and other critical resources.

Internal Threats and Institutional Betrayal

The narrative suggests that the people currently leading the United States are not acting in the interest of its citizens. Evidence cited for this includes the promotion of "death jabs" (COVID-19 vaccines), the refusal to secure borders, and the involvement of political figures like Donald Trump in pushing these medical interventions. The speaker asserts that those who actively poisoned the population and opened the borders cannot be viewed as "rescuers".

Furthermore, events such as the October 7th attacks in Israel are characterized as false flag operations, suggesting that even populations within allied nations like Israel are being targeted by the same global forces using drugs and other intoxicants to destroy societal fabrics.

Future Outlook

The global situation is described as a system of "hurricanes"—highly unpredictable and increasingly dangerous. As conflicts over routes and resources intensify, the "multiplayer game" involving the U.S., China, Russia, Iran, and various Middle Eastern actors (including Qatar, Saudi Arabia, and the Houthis) will continue to expand. The primary focus remains the consolidation of human and natural resources under specific global architectures, a process that has been ongoing for centuries and is now reaching a new peak.

To understand this complex geopolitical landscape, one might imagine a high-stakes chess match played on a board where the squares themselves are constantly shifting. Each player is not just trying to capture pieces, but is also attempting to seize the paths between them, while the spectators are often misled about which side the players are truly on.
